Reich Foreign Minister Wants Question of Disarmament Discussed

DIFFERENCES SAID TO BE INSIGNIFICANT

Collapse of Policy of Understanding Foreseen_If Compromise Is Not Reached

BERLIN, Dec. 30-In an interview with the foreign press representatives this noon, the Foreign Minister, Dr. Gustav Stresemann, declared that the German Government would give all the information demanded by the Allies, and would "loyally carry out the removal of all defaults in connection with disarmament," if the Allies would enter into negotiations with Germany regarding the ques-tion of disarmament in connection with the evacuation of Cologne.

The differences which have arisen between the Allies and Germany regarding disarmament, he said, were too unimportant to endanger the peaceful policy of the London agree-ment. Such insignificant differences had arisen, he said, as for instance whether a factory could produce more explosives than it is producing present, and whether the length of certain lathes at Krupps should not be shortened by five centimeters.

Disarmament and Evacuation "If the Allies want Germany's diswishes more rapidly by negotiations than by force," he said. Dr. Stresemann moreover regretted that the Allies had coupled the disarmament

The conference was no league matter, as many believe. . . I have had experience with the League, and believe it is one of the absolutely essential organizations of the day to preserve the peace of the world. What the League really did was to save the opium treaty of 1912 from being lost. Almost as soon as the League came into existence, it began to look about for methods by which to put the treaty into effect, and what, ordinarily, without the League, would have taken several years to accomplish, was brought about within a few months by the calling of the Geneva Conference. The question is asked why America is taking such a prominent part in this particular question. It had an acute problem in the Philippines. There was a conference and then another which in 1912 drew up a treaty. Thus America, having originated this movement, must take a prominent part in carrying on the work.

We replied that the question of right is disputable, but we cannot in equity and, owing to the friendship of our two nations, ignore the request from the country which brought us with such magnificent cagerness the assistance of its arms and helped us finance the war under conditions which no one can forget; which for years has not ceased to lend us its aid, and which cannot recover its damages except through the rights of our country. lend us its ain, and which cannot recover its damages except through sharing in the Dawes plan annuities.

M. Clementel paid tribute to Owen D. Young and Seymour Parker Gilert Jr., agents general under the Dawes plan, saying:

Had France had any hesitations over granting Mr. Logan's request they must have vanished upon the success in the application of the lawes plan, which once more has shown us the value of American collaboration for the solution of the different for the solution of the different collaboration of the different coll aboration for the solution of the diflaboration for the solution of the dif-ficult problems of reparation. I espe-cially thank Mr. Young for his re-cent speech in New York asking his compatriots to take into account the great sacrifices France made in accepting the Dawes plan. It was entirely impossible for any French minister of finance to contest in equity the request for American participation in the Dawes plan and refuse Mr. Logan the satisfaction he sought.

In giving our adhesion in principle to his request, we have wished to show our sentiments of sincere cordiality for that great and friendly nation, the United States. Has it not always been upon such sentimental bases that affairs pending between the two countries have been settled.

Reverting to the interallied debts, advisable not to raise the question of the interallied debts at the conference of the finance ministers, Jan. 6. But it can equally be advanced that the question of the interallied debts dominates the entire problem of the distribution of the German pay-ments, and that it would be advisable to discuss both questions simultane-

Negotiations will be started; they are absolutely necessary. But for our American debt, as well as for the British iebt, we will come before the Parlia ment and ask its approval before we enter into any final settlement.

ROME, Dec. 30-The publication by opposition journals of a memorandum written by Cesare Rossi, form-erly head of the press bureau in the Premier's department, who is now in prison in connection with the murder of Signor Matteotti, has aggravated still more the situation and widened further the breach between

"Regret over the departed glory of shipping and world marketing in New England ports is as vain as it is useless. The geography of New England means that New England ports are distinctly handicapped as world trading centers—world centers of merchandising, shipping and finance. But foreign trade must remain a vital factor as a support to industrial New England, giving the region the great variety of raw materials necessary for a growingly complex industry, and supplying easily reached markets for the manufactured goods that flow from her

Hughes Envisages Peace in Natural Science Talk

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30-A new era "of international co-operation in and are kept, though not up to the the scientific field which cannot fall best service, the committee asserts. Office managers of several big houses which make for better understandings between peoples," was forecast by Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State, in an address before the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Mr. Hughes based his statement on reports which, he said, revealed that the United States, England, Japan, Australia, Canada, and several European countries had taken "definite steps to encourage and support scientary and efforts to find another suitable and efforts to find another suitable steps to encourage and support scientary and efforts to find another suitable steps to encourage and support scientary and efforts to find another suitable scientary and efforts to find another scientary and efforts to find an cies." The setting up of these new enterprises, he said, "naturally lead to arrangements for special interna-tional scientific conferences." "Thus we are at the threshold of

With scientific applications With scientific applications on every hand the American people are daily winning their escape from the danger of being fooled. There are, it is true, many false prophets who are active in those areas of exertion where patient inquiry and regard for facts are not prized, but their following, while strident, is apparently not increasing.

Savants' Help Needed

Savants' Help Needed

We need your method in government; we need it in law-making and in law administering. We need your interest in knowledge for its own sake; the self-sacrificing ardor of your leaders; your ceaseless search for truth; your distrust of phrases and catchwords; your rejection of every plausible counterfeit; your willingness to discard every disproved theory however honored by tradition, while you jealously conserve every gain of the past against the madcap assault; your quiet temper; and, above all, your faith in humanity and your zeal to promote the social welfare.

We need the international cooperation which makes more effective the essential national endeavor and brings us nearer together as members of one human family who in the presence of science cannot remain estranged but must find means of reconciling their several interests in the harmony of their aspirations and for the common good.

The Secretary declared that each nation should acknowledge its obli-gations in the interest of "necessary international co-operation to make readily available to other nations its assembled data and records.

that are within our grasp. Science, it is true, forges the weapons of war and constantly develops new and more terrible instruments of destruction. But she is far more eloquent as she points to the wastes of strife, the retarding of progress and the vast opportunities that are open to industrious peoples if they are able to abandon their mutual fears and destroy the artificial barriers to community of enterprise.

We should think in terms of the co-operation of peoples and not simply of governments. Science knows no political boundaries; she recruits her conquering chieftains from all climes and races. It may be an Austrian monk, revealing the secrets of plant inheritance; or a New Hampshire farmer's boy who learns to fashlon instruments of the utmost delicacy and precision; or a Serbian herdsman taking youthful lessons in communication by listening through the ground, or a Japanese devotee of medical research isolating and cultivating micro-organisms. In this field all are co-workers and pride is not of race or of tradition but of achievement in the interest of humanity. ers and pride is not of race or of tradition but of achievement in the interest of humanity.

Down With the Bull Fight; Slogan of Mexican Department of Education

OWN with bull-fights!" This has been the slogan of the Department of Education in Mexico for several years. It is the slogan of the new Subsecretary of Education, Manuel Gamio, the archæologist who restored the famous Pyramid of Quetzalcoatl.

The rest of the civilized world likes point the finger of superiority at to point the inger of superiorly at the Spanish-speaking countries, with the demand: "If the Latin peoples aren't harbarous, why do they toler-ate bull-fighting?" The answer is that the institution has gathered about itself all the triple-plate armor of

International Importance

Many persons are unaware perhaps that groups of people in all Latin countries are taking a stand against the sport. It is true that the interchange of bull-fighters among Spanish-speaking countries has al-most diplomatic importance. The performers of Spain tour the New World to show their prowess to the gaping provincials. No matador of or Latin America has won Madrid. The visit to Spain of Rodolfo Gaona, a mere boy, but the greatest living bull-fighter in Mexico, called forth more newspaper space than the reparations question, the recognition conference, and the presidential elections combined. And presidential elections combined. And his ill-reception in Madrid did more to create ill-feeling between the two countries than all the seizures of Spanish haciendas by the Mexican Agrarian Commission. Yet in spite of the propagandized glamour of the bull-fight, groups of enlightened peo-ple in all Latin countries are taking stand against the sport. In Spain campaign against it has been waged for several years. The realism of Vicente Blasco Ibañez tore ring by showing the sordidness and vulgarity of the lives of the participants and the brutality of the exhibitions. Blunt, The second second indomitable, shrewd and hard and narrow in arranging the destinies of his children, he demands that his son shall work his way up in the shipyards, in order that there may be a Thurlow to carry on the family tradition when he himself has passed. But the son, Jack, has not for the ship and the son that the son th passed. But the son, Jack, has not inherited his father's passion for shipbuilding, and the war has filled him with a hatred for machinery. He wants to farm, somewhat after the dilettanteism of Tolstoy, and so he rebels, and, with the assistance of his grandmother, buys himself a country estate. It is the father's struggles to bring the boy back to the shippard that provide the stuff of the drama. The elder Thurlow does not succeed, but he does succeed, after much urging, in persuading the boy to take his place on the first trip of the new transatthe first trip of the new transat-lantic liner the Thurlow shipyard has turned out.

Family Tradition This ship, a radical departure in shipbuilding, and believed to be un-sinkable, is the pride of old John Thurlow's heart. It is the triumph of his career as the greatest builder of his career as the greatest builder of ships of his generation. It is the greatest ship a Thurlow has ever designed and built, and it is the greatest grief of his life that old John Thurlow is unable to go on its maiden trip. So the son takes the old shipbuilder's place. Somewhere off the Labrador coast the ship strikes an iceberg, and, for all its vaunted invulnerability, goes to the vaunted invulnerability, goes to the bottom half an our after the impact. The passengers get off safely in the boats, but the son, in this

It would have been sadly disappily such is not the case. Betty Bronson, who was the author's choice for the part and who comes to it quite Pannishly almost out of nowhere, is the most engaging young fellow imaginable. This Peter might easily have stepped straight from the Never Never Land onto the Paramount window sill, and it is no won-der that the Darling children follow him toyously out of the window after he has successfully had his lost shadow restored to his dancing feet. It must be remembered that this is a screen Peter, and that the demands of the stage Peter are in no wise put upon him. He has but to embody joy and youth, not to voice it. That double task is for all who choose or are chosen to follow the pattern set for all time by Maude Adams. Within these limits, then, Miss Bronson is all that the boldest Barrieite could ask for. Nana, the devoted dog of the Darling nursery, is in (or on) the hands of the famous George All a completely canine joy:

For evening test approach to a man's silk real secret was out. For with all the enthusiasm of a New England housekeeper making apple butter with the last of the autumn apples, this hostess plunged into the details of showing just how and what to do won't really be needed," came amazing reply, "Of course not, for it isn't necessary." The writer suddenly dropped the consideration of mere clothes, for in the very heart of commercialism had its dominant purpose been lifted into the realm finer things. Here, in the palace of merchant princes, a new note had been struck; a high, clear tone that seemed to herald the dawn of a better kind of association and understanding. This hostess had revealed the possession of something of far greater significance than the charm and grace of the drawing room or the insight and ability of administration, lovely and desirable as these talents may be.

A Shopper's Need

As the conviction came that this was exactly the kind of helpful service of which women shoppers had long felt the need, and that this fact augured well for the creation of many similar positions for this par-ticular type of woman, the repre-sentative of The Christian Science Monitor threw aside all semblance of pretense and requested to be granted an interview. In the twinkling of an eye the tables were turned, and for the first time it was the hostess who was surprised. After a few moments of laughing protestations that any such rôle was quite foreign to the duties of the position, instinctive resource-

A Wise Counselor

"Hostess!" How delightful! With a flash of envy and regret that she advanced for consideration. At once the hostess became also the wise and valued counselor. Here, indeed, was a new kind of service. Timely suggestions and pertinent bits of information were given, and with restored poise and enlightened judgment a second tour of the cases was made. posed of belge georgette, with a gold gown, and the form of the shoulders. These ends may be long enough to wrap around the neck. Scarves to match the dresses worn in this way are the vogue for evening as well as day-time wear. Gold and silver tissue are again employed, trimmed with soft fabric lace to match. A dress may have a lace bodice with a tissue skirt and be joined with bead embroidery.

Evening Cloaks

The mode for having an evening dress and cloak to match still remains, and the style more generally adopted is that of using a liming to match the gown. A black velvet coat lined with colored eviet is always effective. A favorite model shows a cape of this fabric smoked to a low waist line and trimmed with a large collar.

The appearance of well-known screen stars at the Los Angeles radiocast stations is a regular occurrence, and the programs on which they appear are among the most popular. A great many of the prominent players of the silent drama are excellent musicians, singand entertainers who started their professional careers legitimate stage or in vaudeville or musical comedy, and their participation in radio programs insures double interest in the programs, because of the excellent quality of entertainment promised, and because of their popularity with followers of the movies.

During the recent Radio Expo sition at the Ambassador Hotel Auditorium a series of programs was radiocast direct from a platform in the show through KFI and all of the programs were literally crammed with talent from the studios. Each night the microphone was turned over to a popular star such as Monte Blue, Herbert Rawlinson, Larry Semon, Lew Cody and others, who acted as announcer and master of ceremonies for the evening. the opening of today's New York stock market, with contrasting variations reflecting the play of opposing speculative forces.

American Sugar, Colorado Fuel and International Paper were hammered down a point each, while American Can and General Asphalt moved up a point or more.

More general weakness was displayed in the later dealings as growing apprehension over continued high money rates led to increased speculative offerings for both accounts. United States Steel, which estab-lished a new high at 121 yesterday, sold at 119, while U. S. Cast Iron Pipe and General Electric fell back a point each, and General Asphalt forfeited its with the main trend appearing to be downward.

Foreign exchanges opened higher, a moderate advance in sterling lifting the rate to the highest level in five years at $4.73%.

While reactionary tendencies prevailed during the morning because of the unusually large volume of profittaking and bear selling, the market presented many individual points of strength.

Beechnut Packing extended its gain

Beechnut Packing extended its gain beechnut Packing extended its gain to 5% points by moving up to 72%,
American Express advanced 5% points

REVIEW OF MONEY FOR 1924 YEAR

Outstanding Event Decline in Commercial Paper Rate -Credit Volume Heavy

Decline in money rates has been the outstanding development in the domestic credit situation during the last year.

After reaching in May, 1923, their highest point since the depression of 1921, rates on commercial paper declined until September, 1924, apart from an upward seasonal movement in the fall of 1923, to a point lower in the fall of 1923, to a point lower than they had been at any previous time since 1916.

Rates on call loans and bankers' acceptances, and yields on certificates of indebtedness showed similar de-clines, but made slight advances from

The accompanying table shows the rates on various types of loans for July, 1922, which were about the low points reached during the depression 1920-22, and the movement of rates since May, 1923:

The banks therefore increased their investments in order to use funds that would otherwise have been idle.

It was the surplus funds, then, made available by the inflowing gold, that accounted for the unusual phenomena of a credit expansion during a period of business recession, and the opposite movements of member bank credit and reservé bank credit.

Member banks are now in an unusually strong position, as Secretary Mellon pointed out, and can make substantial increases in their commercial loans, in case of need, without rediscounting at the Federal Reserve banks. Gold imports have also been a factor in creating the present case in the money market.

The prospects are that the general trend of business will be upward during 1925. Money rates, it would seem, should be slightly higher in the spring than present levels, and the cost of commercial accommodation seems very likely to be a full 1-per cent higher for example of the core short Line rfg 4s '29.

Probably the most outstanding fea-ture of the market during the last ture of the market during the last week has been the firmness of prices all along the line—a firmness originating partly in a steadily hardening market for the raw cotton, and partly in a much better sold condition on the part of the mills.

The prospect of a wage crisis in Fall River, which, if it comes, can only mean the reduction of the present rates of pay from 10 to 20 per cent, looms in buyers' minds as a possible harbinger of slightly easier market levels, and made them unwilling to place further business at the moment, until the situation clears, somewhat.

The decline in 1918 was due directly to war activities and therefore represents an abnormal condition, the effects of which are not comparable with conditions in 1921 or 1924. In 1921, curtailment was due to the deflation of general business and left in its wake deficits, heavy inventories and tremendous debts.

The congress was presided over by Senator Drake-Brockman, who is chairman of the General Council of Employers of Australia. In his allowers he made a plea to both sides to preserve 2 proper balance in industry and to facilitate collective bargaining. There was 2 great need in Australia today for employers and workers getting together.

A Common Impression

Lord Willingdon attributes this, much to defects in the rethe impression has been allowed to get abroad that the British Government would only move forward under the pressure of violent agitation. Moderates, he said, have been naturally disinclined to give active support to those whom they "suspect of want of sincerity" in promoting their aspirations toward responsible Government. He continued:

For myself, I always felt that the non-cooperation movement was a disloyal agitation . . . and I feel confident that if we had, from the confident that if we had, from the first, treated the promoters and or-ganizers of this movement, who openly stated they wished to para-lyze the Government and render it impotent, as enemies to Govern-ment as established by law, we should have been saved many of the tragedies, difficulties, and anxieties which we have experienced in India of late vears.

It was a very good toy trolley car, and looked just like a real one, only of course it was very much smaller, and there was a sign on it saying that people who wanted to ride must have their money all ready to pay their fare when they got on.

But after a while Johnny and Jane had stopped watching the trolley car go round and round, and had settled down on the window seat with a picture book. So there stood the toy trolley car on the floor just as if it was waiting for passengers. And the picture book was so interesting to Johnny and Jane that it was just as quiet in the playroom as if nobody

"He's a wise mouse, and I guess he'll wait till the cial Correspondence)-Migration is in the melting pot, and acceptance car stops."
And just then the car stopped, and of the British Government's new scheme, it seems, will result in a radical change of the nature of settlement of the land by arrivals from

The New South Wales Govern ment's existing scheme, under the agreement with the Commonwealth and Great Britain, together with other states' schemes of this kind, apparently will go by the board. It is proposed that the agreement between Great Britain, the Common wealth Government and New South Wales, whereby £6,000,000 of loan noney is to become available for set tling migrants in New South Wales shall be superseded. Whether the new scheme will provide for placing migrants directly upon the land is in

The most important feature of these proposals is that the money will not be available for acquiring estates and settling migrants on the land. It will be for developmental works, such as roads, railways and

A First Installment New South Wales has been on tenterhooks ever since the new pro-posals were mentioned, for it has had to go on with its present scheme, yet has been in the dark as to how long it will continue, and as to whether and by what it will be followed; yet only recently it was found necessary to accept the first installment of £500,000 of the £6,000,000 loan undertaking.

However, there are those who ook hopefully to the new proposals, in view of the misgiving which is felt as to the practicability of the State's existing scheme. While it is based upon the assumption that it will be possible to settle migrants on the land for £1500 each, it appears far more probable that the cost will amount to £2500 each. Britain's farming class. He said: With an idea of getting haif a dozen Scotch families to settle on my Bendooley Estate, near Bowral, I called at the High Commissioner's office, in London, to see what help they could give me in finding the right kind of people. I was told it would be difficult to get the required type. want in Australia. I selected 12 within convenient range of the city, and called personally on the writers. I found them living in nice, beautifully clean cottages. The ages of the men ran from 36 to 44, and their families included from two to six children. These families, like others who answered my advertise-ment, had already tried to get to Australia through Australia House and failed.

Returning to London, I to applications to Australia House. I interviewed the Director of Migration, and I saw the High Commissioner himself. Both explained that stoner himself. Both explained that they were only acting under instructions from Australia. Unless the type of settlers were nominated by a private person in the Commonwealth they could not be sent out. The Commissioner confessed that he was ashamed to have to turn such people away.

He adds:

Eugene Field's greatest literary productivity.

'Eugene Field's Creative Years" (New York: Doubleday,

Eugene Field, challenging a number of misunderstandings and portraying the poet as those who knew him intimately would wish. Field's was an extraordinary

There are many Eugene Fields. Like the Apostle, he

There are many Eugene Fields. Like the Apostle, ho was all things to all men and much to many. Curiously enough the Eugene Field of Julian Hawthorne was diametrically the opposite of George W. Cable's Eugene Field. To Bill Nye he was an eccentric but charming companion, and James Whitcomb Riley, wondering at his versatility of talent, found Field an isolated character running counter to any prior opinion that might have been formed of him.

Because of the undue prominence given by writers in the past to the lighter aspect of his mind, Field to many has become in a sense a legendary character—a sort of Eulenspiegel —very different from the true Field. This, perhaps is not surprising, despite its extreme injustice, in view of the abounding whimsicality of his character.

There have been lamentations by writers in recent years because none of Field's friends and associates "had the Boswellian talent" to take down and preserve his drollery and his wit. . . It is true that Field's merry talk and his innumerable jests would have been difficult to preserve.

However, the essence of his humor has not been lost, as I think readers of the quotations from his pen which are contained in this volume will testify.

In this last sentence, in modest terms, Mr. Dennis has disclosed the chief merit of his book. While giving an adequate and most interesting sketch of the poet's marvelous career, and while recognizing, as some one wrote of Theodore Hook, that it was "impossible to draw his figure without his cap and bells," he has gone back to Field to write his own story of his literary activities.

And yet it would not be safe always to interpret Field's character from his sayings or his writings. He loved a joke so well that he was not at all loth to make himself the butt. A good deal of misjudgment respect-ing his habits resulted. One such prank of his has just been disclosed, unwittingly, by Mr. Milton A. McRae in traveling expenses.

I did not know of Field's peculiar fondness for the flowrning not long afterward to see a most friendly, even since leaving Chicago I've been having a good time, I want to thank you for it."

he said, "and the parlor car was very luxurious. In fact lightful volume on "The Eugene Field I Knew":

This was all very true. As Mr. Dennis puts it:

As Francis Wilson said in opening his de

EDITORIALS

No fair-minded man will take issue with Viscount Cecil upon the estimate he put upon the present value to humanity of the League of Nations in his speech before the Woodrow Wilson Foundation. For with characteristic tactfulness he made no claim of service by the League, present or potential, to the United States, nor did he criticize, even by indirection, the present determination of the American Government to refrain from adhesion to the Geneva Covenant.

But Lord Cecil did recognize the will to peace apparent in every official act and utterance in the United States, and he was able to enumerate many endeavors and accomplishments of the League thoroughly in accord with that will, though without official recognition from Washington. If it serves no other purpose, the institution at Geneva affords a forum for the discussion of problems which menace peace and which, like most problems of the sort, are solved by full and free discussion among those nations intimately concerned. Even at this moment, as set forth in a special cable to yesterday's Monitor, a commission appointed by the League is pursuing at Constantinople investigations into the disputed boundary lines of the Kingdom of Irak.

The investigation will be carried to Angora and thence to Bagdad and Mosul. Had there been no League to create the international commission, the dispute between Great Britain and Turkey could hardly have been settled without recourse to arms. Perhaps the acid test, in this instance, will come when the report of the commission is presented, for should a boundary be conceded which would leave the Mosul oil fields to Turkey a heavy strain would be put upon British devotion to the League.

Lord Cecil rightly sets forth as the next step toward the removal of the menace of war a new international conference for the limitation of armaments supplementary to the one called by President Harding at Washington. Concerning this step there is substantial unanimity of purpose between the United States and the great powers in the League! For if the conference contemplated in the League's protocol should be abandoned because of the failure of four powers to give their acquiescence prior to May 4, President Coolidge will proceed with his invitation to the powers to the same end. On the other hand, if the conference contemplated by the League should be held, there is no reason to question the participation of the United States in it, subject to reasonable limitations.

Marching along parallel lines to the same goal -the maintenance of peace-the United States and the League may accomplish much without actually meeting at a common point. But every year of progress and useful achievement by the Geneva organization will tend to break down American prejudice and make co-operation easier and more complete.

Few people in the United States who are willing to admit their honest convictions in the matter would vote to return to the days of the open saloon. In discussing, before a Philadelphia audience, the topic, "What's the Matter With Prohibition?" Wayne B. Wheeler, counsel for the Anti-Saloon League of America, declared that prohibition, even with its deficiencies, at its worst is better than license at its best. This is the premise he sought to establish, and this is the main fact to be considered in the effort to bring about a more complete enforcement of the law. Thus analyzed, there is nothing wrong with prohibition but the lack of complete enforcement of the law which the people have enacted and to which they have voluntarily dedicated their honest efforts.

"What's Wrong With Prohibition?"

The results of even this incomplete enforcement are not hard to find. Mr. Wheeler pointed out some of them in his speech. He showed that prohibition had stopped the flow of money which once poured by billions into the saloons and that it has diverted this wealth into legitimate business channels. He stated that America has never before known such generally distributed good times: that poverty has practically vanished, charitable organizations requiring $74,000,000 less annually to provide for those impoverished through drink.

It will be remembered that a few years ago great concern was expressed because of the loss to hotels of the revenue derived from their bars. It was insisted by some that these great institutions could not long survive under prohibition. Mr. Wheeler quotes Chairman Howie of the American Hotel Association educational committee as saving that three-fourths of the hotel owners in America would oppose any breakdown of the Volstead Act because prohibition has lifted them from the level of saloonists into the realm of legitimate business. He cites the fact that new hotels costing $250,-000,000 are being built today.

There is another bright side to the picture. It has been proved that business and not commercialized vice pays a revenue. Taxes from liquor entailed a greater public cost than the receipts totaled. Crime, poverty, and all the accompanying by-products of the saloon exacted a terrible toll. There are 5000 fewer inmates in American penitentiaries than when the Nation went dry. One of the states has closed seven of its twenty-one jails, has sold two, and is planning to sell a third. The latest federal prison census showed 1960 penal institutions empty when the count was made. The summing up which Mr. Wheeler makes is not extravagant. He says: "Just as the teetotaler individual is stronger, happier, more efficient, less brawling, richer, and a better citizen than the tippler, so a prohibition nation is better after it has closed its breweries and distilleries than when it seeks to pawn the morals, the health and the prosperity of its people for a price.

There is the answer to the query. Nothing is wrong with prohibition. The only trouble is in the lack of that complete enforcement which would multiply, in nearly every community, the blessings that have already been realized.

Interesting coincidences in the news are fairly frequent. Not often, however, may one chance on a more strikingly pertinent combination of dispatches, unintentionally correlated, than recently appeared in the columns of this paper. Within four issues it was announced that the United States would join other nations in a consideration of the regulation of traffic in arms, that Americans sold abroad annually millions of dollars worth of war munitions, and that 1924's uneasy situation in China had been rendered worse by "flagrant violation by several powers of the embargo against the import of arms." This last statement, made by Sir John Jordan at the London dinner of the China Association, of which he is president, offers a concrete instance of the need of next May's international congress, just as the announcement preceding it proposes more generally the selfsame necessity

Not for months have thoughtful students of today's conditions had better reading offered them than came in the brief cable from Geneva telling of a conference of "members and nonmembers of the League of Nations, to meet here on May 4, 1925." The dispatch continues: "The American Government has officially informed the Secretary-General that it will take part. The Council has decided to summon for Feb. 5, 1925, a co-ordinating commission charged to investigate the private manufacture of arms and implements of war, with a view to prepare a draft international convention." The supplemental news which followed this has all been good, for it has detailed a broadening and deepening of the entirely practical plans already formulated by those who drew the agenda to be considered. From what has been given out it would seem that the basic ideas are two: to regulate arms shipments, and to turn the searchlight of publicity on the traffic and thus bring general opinion to bear on the task of stopping it.

If there is crying need for this, in almost any state in two hemispheres, that need cries loudest from some of the so-called "backward" corners of the Eastern continents where petty wars are most persistent and mercenary men most callous. Complete prohibition of arms exports should be maintained for certain maritime territorial zones in Asia and Africa, and the defining of the exact nature of such zones should be a chief duty of those May discussions. When Sir John Jordan (who, fourteen years British Minister at Peking, has spent the greater part of his life in China) asserted that despite the embargo the importing of arms both by the central government of the country and the tuchuns has been "openly connived at," he did no more, after all, than match a statement made not long before by one of the foreign consuls in North Africa, who said: "Practically every country in the world is shipping arms into Morocco. In a recent case, of which I have personal knowledge, a ship put in with all its refrigerating machinery full of arms-seized by the customs, of course. Such things are of almost daily occurrence."

Nor would it be difficult to find other cases of war kept alive and human life consequently squandered that a few great concerns might reap large dividends. Does it not bear pointedly on the subject that, in 1923, according to statistics obtained by a representative of The Christian Science Monitor from the Washington Department of Commerce, private munition firms sent abroad from American ports close to $5,500,000 worth of firearms and ordnance, while the first ten months of 1924 surpassed that figure by better than $100,000. As the bad matter stands, it is all and utterly discreditable to the world. This states a black fact palely, indeed. But if there be any one phase of it worse than another it is that the "civilized" part of humanity so regularly enriches itself at the last cost of the "uncivilized." By all means shut off the exportation of war munitions from anywhere to anywhere at every time, but let special care be taken that the seal of international agreement be set tightly and promptly on the ports of the Orient.

Recent explorations in the Mammoth Cave, in Kentucky, are said to have disclosed, in one of its subterranean chambers, relics indicating the existence of a race which antedated the era which indefinitely marks the origin of the American Indians. There remain, despite the centuries that have passed, what are regarded by those who have examined them as indisputable evidences that the cave was once inhabited by a large tribe or colony of people, and that it was their home for a long period. The walls of this particular chamber were found to be blackened by the soot from many fires. The floors and crevices between the broken rock are filled with twigs and bark which fell from firewood dragged from place to place in the cave.

But, strangest of all, is the proof, accepted by those who have analyzed it, that these prehistoric people were vegetarians, and that although wild animals must have been all about them, they habitually refrained from destroying them, either to provide food or clothing. Many remneats of the apparel worn have been found, all of which, as well as the bedding, were made from grass. The fact that they were vegetarians is accepted as proof that they were in no way connected with the Indians. and tending to establish the fact that they belonged to a period antedating the presence of the Indian tribes is the circumstance that the

the chestnut have been found in the cave once occupied by them. This is accepted as proof that they lived in a period prior to that in which the chestnut was indigenous.

Many stone axes and wooden bowls hollowed out by fire have been found, but nowhere have there been discovered the bones of wild animals. or skins used for any purpose. One wonders why only these mute witnesses remain to tell of the vanished hopes, the ambitions, the departed glories of a race whose simple history can never be written. Through the ages, perhaps, there has come down, unbeknown even to himself, someone whose origin might be traced to that early period. Not all the chronicles of the world and its people have been written. It is difficult to imagine the complete extinction of a race. The destiny of mankind is not oblivion. Men cling tenaciously to existence, but in a generation or two the legend of hardships endured and conquests won or lost becomes mere tradition. Few of today are able to trace back through more than a century or two a lineage of which they may be justly proud. Before the dawn of what we regard as an era of enlightenment and progress the record was even more indifferently kept.

Surely a people who refused to yield to the belief that only by taking life could life be sustained, should have endured. And who shall say that it is impossible that somewhere in the Kentucky mountains there are those who have descended from this prehistoric tribe? How proud would be the boast that they, if such there be, were the "first Americans"!

The revival of that ever-young whimsy of Sir James M. Barrie, Peter Pan, and its successful transfer to the motion-picture screen, should, in addition to furnishing delightful hours to the millions of young folks of all ages. suggest the importance of play for the grown-ups who have forgotten that they are still children, and need to be reminded that what is called years of maturity need not be years of dignified solemnity. Peter Pan knew better; like Kipling's monkeys, who, although they could speak, refused to talk, lest they be civilized and set to work, he declined to become a mature person with a top hat and a position in the world's affairs. He preferred the serious business of fighting pirates, forming friendships with Indians, and performing heroic deeds in imitation of the boy Napoleon, who played a game of being Emperor of France and dictator of Europe. Perhaps it is only a coincidence that the world that has laughed and thrilled with the adventures of Peter, the creation of a fanciful Scotsman, is also indebted to the Scots for the game that has done more than any other agency to teach the elder boys to play. Whether golf originated in Sweden, or in Holland, as some claim, doesn't matter. It was in Scotland that it became a popular pastime, and it was from the Land of Cakes that it spread to all regions of the earth. Introduced into the United States only a generation ago, it penetrated into the most remote corners with amazing rapidity, and now is played by millions. Golf clubs are numbered by the thousands; public links have been established by many cities:

and interest in the game is steadily increasing. The call of the southern lands to northern winter visitors is chiefly an invitation to come and follow the bounding ball over the hazards and fairways. This is the season when the extremely busy merchant, manufacturer, banker or professional man finds that he is in danger of becoming staid and respectable, and decides that he will quit making money for a while, and go out and play. It is not the length of the drive, nor the skill with which a ball is extricated from a difficult lie, that matters. Golf is not a game for experts; for the proper stance, the right swing, faultless driving, the selection of the right club. It is play for boys who haven't grown up, and are not ashamed to go out on a field and have sport swatting a ball and, maybe, getting satisfaction out of their ability to do just a little better than their playmates.

Editorial Notes

A conspicuous example of the benefits which co-operation, harmony of thought and mutual confidence might bring is furnished by the transit situation in New York, where animosity, distrust and the desire for personal glorification have resulted in a condition of intolerable congestion on the transportation lines. It is of less moment to determine who is to blame than it is to rectify the matter immediately and proceed with the construction of badly-needed new lines, held up for seven years due to the seeming unwillingness of certain interested parties to accede to the view of others. The round-table conference, with a mutual exchange of views and the surrendering of untenable positions in the interests of harmony, has been eminently successful elsewhere in adjusting disputes of all kinds. The Mayor of New York and the Transit Commission, holding, as they do, entirely divergent views, cannot both be right, but there is certainly a common meeting point where the theories of the two sides to the controversy can be reconciled.

Brilliant as undoubtedly Mr. Winston Churchill is, almost as brilliant was the sally for which Sir John Simon was responsible in an address delivered in the Caird Hall, Dundee, a short while since. "There is a new piece of jazz dance music now being played," Sir John is quoted as saying, "which has been called, 'The Winston Constitution.'" "You take a step forward, two steps backward, a side step to the right, and then reverse," he added. No one would claim, he further urged, that Mr. Churchill was one of the fixed stars in the political firmament; he is a meteor in the political sky of whom it could be safely said he will not very long remain in a fixed position. All the same, it must be acknowledged that, with all his vicissitudes, Mr. hulls and shells of every variety of nut except | Churchill is far from suffering a total eclipse.

Eugene Field—His Life and Work

By MELVILLE E. STONE

The following article is of special interest because its writer is the counselor for The Associated Press and was the editor of the Chicago Daily News at the time of fires me and takes me back the next day. Now, you wouldn't do that, would you?"

I shook my head negatively and he replied: "Well, there, you see how it is—you would never stand for me getting drunk, and if I went to work for you I'd be losing my fob one day, for of course I just have to get drunk occasionally."

Whereupon he smiled a beatife smile as he passed out of my office and life. Despite his human frailties, he was a simple, noble soul that communed with little children and through them, with God. All too limited are the memoirs of one of America's great poets and litterateurs, Eugene Field. An addition to them, therefore, penned by an intimate associate, Charles H. Dennis, who is the happy possessor of many hitherto unpublished papers, deserves a place in every library. Mr. Dennis in the opening chapter of his book,

Of course McRae believed all that Field told him. But, as everyone of Field's associates know it was simply one of his amusing, although self-hurtful, inventions. He never drank while on the Daily News staff, and, of course, was therefore never forgiven for drunkenness by me. He wrote and enjoyed the publication of his verses: "The Cold Bottle and the Hot Bird" and "The Clink of the Ice in the Pitcher," although they gave the public a wholly false impression of his practices. He so wrote of himself that it is small wonder that men like William Reedy, of St. Lou's, denounced him violently as a "lost soil."

In a letter just received from Mr. Dennis, he asks me to deny the McRae incident, saving: I fancy you know whether Field ever made such a trip for the purpose mentioned. Is it possible that Field played a prank on McRae? He might well have done so, but if he did, doubtless he told you the joke. That part of the yarn about his getting drunk periodically is altogether too absurd

Of course, it was, as I have said, a prank. These were so common with him that I have forgotten whether he told me of it, or not. I repeat, as I have often done, that he was a model of abstemiousness, an indefatigable worker, and beneath all of his jocularity, a sober-minded. highly moral character,-in streaks.

4 4 4 Mr. Dennis's book is full of interest and amusement It bubbles over with examples of Field's inimitable fun, but, at the same time, gives us illustrations of other sides of his wonderfully versatile mentality. Incorrigible as a jester, yet also touching the tenderest and most sacred chords of human nature—who could measure the wide expanse of his poetic vision? Now a Merry Andrew, next in Fairy Land, then in God's Acre-was there ever such another? Laughing and sobbing—a master of satire, yet never making an enemy—voicing the agony of a bereaved mother, singing a tender lullaby at an infant's cot, and, a moment later, breaking into roaring farce—such was the Eugene Field whom Mr. Dennis faith-the files of the Chicago Daily News and gleaned quota-tion after quotation which, in larger measure, constrain fully portrays.

And yet, as one who sustained intimate relations with both Field and Dennis, perhaps I may be permitted to say a word or two critical. Dennis properly calls attention to the fact that Field's pranks were so amusing and so attractive that they tended to blind the public estimate of his better side. On the other hand, it is just to say that Field was not perfect, and that the failings of the Dennis portrait may lean to virtue's side. Apparently, Dennis believes that during the "Creative Years," For many years, Eugene Field, one of America's famous humorists and newspaper poets, contributed a column for the Chicago Daily News. Just before Melville Stone sold his stock in that paper to Victor Lawson, I had lunch one day in Chicago with Field, and made him an offer to write for us. He took the offer under consideration and agreed to come to St. Louis and talk it over if I would pay his traveling expenses. which he writes, he was the poet's chosen companion and confidant, and therefore qualified to appraise his subject.

But this may not be true. During these years, Dennis was Field's chief on the editorial staff of the Chicago Daily News, and it is more than possible that Field was canny rather than candid in their relations. It would be like him. In many ways he was a spoiled child. Timorous about his fame, so that he often credited other people with his best effusions; loving children in the abstract, but often disliking them as individual associ-ates; prone to tease them, because disposed to troat them as his own kind; irresponsible, yet at heart honest about money matters-Field's foibles were always for knew him. So Dennis has said of him in a book which will be read and enjoyed by a myriad of intelligent people.

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Moscow

The Russo-German commercial negotiations, which are now going on here, are arousing a certain amount of interest. Mr. Ganetzky, the head of the Russian delegation, is disposed to lay special stress upon three points: the maintenance of the foreign trade monopoly, the right to export grain into Germany free from duty and the conclusion of a veterinary agreement which would establish definite standards and eliminate the disputes which have sometimes arisen about the quality of certain animal products which Russia has been exporting. The negotiations will be suspended in a few days, in order to permit the members of the German delegation to return home for the holidays. They will be resumed in January; and some sort of trade convention, embodying the results of the negotiations, may be anticipated in the early days

Last week marked the second anniversary of the first issuance of the chervonetz, the ten-ruble bank note of the State Bank, which furnished Russia with its first stable currency after the Revolution. The chervonetz was naturally a little slow in finding its way into popular confidence and favor. However, the energetic intervention of the State Bank protected the chervonetz during the early months of its existence; and after it triumphantly survived the shock of the Curzon ultimatum in the spring of 1923 its stability was no longer seriously questioned The number of chervontsi has increased to correspond with the growing commercial and industrial resources of the country, and the total value of the chervontsi issued by the State Bank is now given as 579,410,000 rubles, almost $300,000,000. Not all these chervontsi are in circulation, some being held in reserve in the vaults of the State Bank and the Finance Commissariat. 4 4 4

Perhaps borrowing the idea from the British organization "Hands Off Russia," a society "Hands Off China," sprang up in Russia a couple of months or so ago, at a time when it seemed as if the civil war in China might lead to foreign intervention. Anti-imperialist meetings were held and members were enrolled all over the country. Now "Hands Off China" has a rival in "Hands Off Egypt," a society which has just been organized in Baku, the great oil center of the Caucasus and capital of the Republic of Azerbaijan. There was a certain strategic suitability in selecting Baku as the place to launch the "Hands Off Egypt" movement: for the Muhammadan Tartars of Azerbaijan may be expected to feel a certain amount of Pan-Islamic sympathy for their co-religionists

The British trade union delegation, headed by Mr president of th has been touring the country and receiving an enthusias tic reception everywhere, according to reports in the Moscow press. Immediately after the publication of the recent British note to Russia, the delegation sent a message from Rostov to the effect that Zinovieff had shown them the archives of the Communist Internationale and that they were convinced of the falsity of the alleged Zinovieff letter. The delegation has now arrived in Tifis, the capital of Georgia, and Mr. Purcell is quoted the convincion of the control of the contro as saying in a speech immediately after his arrival that the delegation would be able to inform the British workers about the true state of affairs in Georgia.

The Present Disturbances in Albania

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

A special from the Monitor Bureau at Washington, published in your issue of Dec. 19, gives an explanation of the present disturbances in Albania by Capt. G. Gordan-Smith, who is attached to the Jugoslav Legation and is a well-known spokesman for Serbia. According to him, Albania is a semi-savage country and its people are a constant source of trouble inside as well as outside of their country.

The present disturbances in Albania are due to the efforts of Ahmed Zoghu, ex-Premier of Albania, who fled to Belgrade on his downfall from power, to regain the Cantain Smith tells us that "bands of one-time Wrangel White Russian troops are alleged to be in Ahmed Zoghu's command, while Bolshevist leaders have entered the troubled scene."

does not tell us, however, how these White Russian troops came to be in Zoghu's command, for he would have had to acknowledge that they are resident refugees in Serbia and that their joining Zoghu could not have been done without the knowledge and connivance of the Serbian authorities

The Albanian Government, on the other hand, has made a direct appeal to the League of Nations, and has openly charged the Belgrade Government with instigating the disturbances. Arms have been selzed such as are disturbances. Arms have been seized such as used in the Jugoslav Army; prisoners have declared that they were ordered by the Serbian authorities to invade Albania, while ex-soldiers of the Bulgarian Army, who in consequence of the agrarian and communistic rising a ago took refuge in Serbia, are said to be in charge

If the recruitment of these men and the supply of arms have escaped the notice of the Serbian authorities, the Belgrade Government must have been guilty of culpable negligence. The Jugoslav Legation in Paris, as might have been expected, has categorically denied, on behalf of its Government, these charges. In unison with Captain Smith, the Legation ascribes the present troubles Albania to Bolshevist agitation. The Bolsheviki are n doubt guilty of widespread propaganda; but one doubts if a wild and mountainous country like Albania, where neither agrarian nor industrial proletariat exists, would have been selected in which to start a revolution

Besides, there is an inconsistency in associating, as Captain Smith does, Wrangel's White Russian troops with Bolsheviki, fighting side by side. It is not likely that Wrangel and his troops, who are anti-Bolshevist to the core and fought the Bolsheviki in Russia, would lend support to a Bolshevist movement in Albania. When one scrutinizes closely the Albanian and the Serbian versions of the present troubles in Albania, one can easily see that the Belgrade Government is not so innocent as it pretends to be of countenancing Ahmed Zoghu's incursion into Albania.

"Tipping and Non-Tipping"

To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

Your recent editorial entitled, "Tipping and Non-Tinning," greatly interested me, and I would like to say standpoint of a guest in a large hotel for women in America's Capital city, where the "no tipping" system is in operation.

On entering the hotel one is impressed that some thing is different-an atmosphere of friendly interest and desire to be of service (asking nothing in return) that pervades the entire establishment. From the moment of arrival, when the porter assists you at the door of your cab (evidently with one thought-to do his part until you are safely on your journey again, there is that very definable something at every turn that one is ready to recognize as a genuine sense of co-operation-r nessengers, elevator girls, maids, waitresses, all doing their part. One is convinced that each is inspired with the one purpose of making your stay as pleasant as

As a guest in this hotel for three months, I have never seen a tip accepted, but have seen more than or turned to the giver—and that too, with an evident feel-ing of pleasure at having this part in working out the idea. There has been splendid co-operation from guests since the policy of the hotel became known. As to the quotation in your editorial relative to those who would persist if it were possible, "in the hope of gaining preferential treatment," it would soon be evident even to those that there is no "preferential treatment." since each attention is the best the moment affords, no matter

Each service, even though repeatedly sought, as well as much that is unsought, is given with an enthusiasm akin to that which one would receive in the home of friends—and I have never seen any discrimination shown between one guest and another.

That this system should be generally adopted, and in the not-far-distant future, seems only a natural result when one has seen it so practically demonstrated Washington, D. C.
